The Wrist Talker is a basic communication device that can record a 10-second phrase. Students who are verbal or nonverbal can use this to facilitate their communication needs. Programming in a quick "I need my device." or "Give me a break." can provide an efficient way to express basic needs.

Did you know we have books in our Lending Library too? Borrow Language and Literacy for the Early Years by Sally Neaum. A great resource for any educator working in the preschool setting. The resource explains developmental theory and provides examples for aiding language acquisition through rhymes, songs, and storytelling.

Information for Digital Rights Managers

Every purchase contract for textbooks should include language that requires publishers to submit NIMAS-conformant files to the NIMAC. This is the only way to ensure that the books chosen for the school can be made available in specialized formats now and in the future. It cannot be assumed that another school has already made this request. The need for contract language regulates schools, not publishers. The publishers will not submit files to the NIMAC unless that is requested by purchasers. The ICAM has provided sample contract language to copy, paste and fill in into the appropriate page of the purchasing contract.
